

Final Project Review
Forest Reserves and Mineral Resource Areas in Ghana
Mandela Gadri

This project, website and page are very well done. I really enjoyed having all the information for the project very accessible and close by. The structure of the page is wonderful and follows an almost story like design. Everything brings you deeper into the subject and I think with a project like this, that is important for the reader to become involved and develop a sense of caring. Within a few seconds of loading this page, I knew I was interested.

In my project, I thought about incorporating some sort of search bar, but I ran out of time and resources. Looking at Mandela's project helps me see what mine could look like if I decided to put more time into it after this class. I love how the background of the page is an image and I think it helps wraps the whole tone of the project together. I have learned a lot from this web page, specifically how to section elements and create a story like feel. As for the maps, I think after a little bit of time looking at the inspect elements tab, I could learn a few things about the widgets he included in his maps.

As for the styling of this project, I can honestly say I would not change anything because I can't think of a better way to do it. This is by far one of the best projects in the class I have looked at and find it incredible that he created three maps, while maintaining high quality throughout. If I were to change one thing, I would make the conclusion stand out more. That is an excellent selling point on this project, and it is very well worded.

I am sort of stunned at this project. I didn't think I would see this kind of thing especially with all the implications of COVID and other classes. I thoroughly enjoyed reading through this project and would recommend anyone to give it a look. I think this is a really important issue that not enough people know about. This could be a huge ignitor for a move to reduce mining efforts in Ghana. It is cool seeing projects like these that have actual real work potential to be used. I think that is what separates some projects from others, the ability for everyday people or people in this field to use this as a tool for research and education.
